Marriot Grosvenor House

Frequented by royalty, celebrities and business leaders since its opening in 1929, the historic Grosvenor House became a JW Marriott Hotel in September 2008 at the culmination of its restoration. With its stately forecourt graced by its original Lutyens wrought-iron gates, striking hotel reception and intimate library, our five-star hotel's London guests are introduced to the approachable elegance that extends throughout richly appointed guest rooms, palatial suites and executive-level rooms to lavish public spaces, including our extensive fitness suite. Discover one of the most luxurious five-star hotels in London-Grosvenor House.

The hotel has a pedestrian entrance on Park Lane in Mayfair but this is not the 'main / courtyard' entrance which is actually on Park Street. The official address of the hotel is 86-90 Park Lane. It is an outpost of London's largest cluster of luxury hotels, which is centred on Hyde Park Corner.

The Great Room (which is a separate room to the Ballroom) at the Grosvenor House is the venue of many prominent awards evenings, charity balls and the like and is often seen on British television. It is one of the largest ballrooms in Europe, with a maximum capacity of 2,000 seated (200 10-person tables) or 1,100 theatre style. Although now not used as such, the Great Room was originally built as an ice-rink and much of the machinery lies dormant under the current flooring.
